1. (currently amended) A system for assisting a user in navigating through a performance of a task, the task including a plurality of sub-tasks, the system comprising:

a graphical user interface comprising:

a list of two or more sub-tasks associated with the task, the list including for each sub-task:

an identifier, and a datum corresponding to a parameter, and two or more panels, each panel associated with a respective sub-task in the list; and a task performance component configured to:

control a presentation of the two or more panels in the graphical user interface, for each of the two or more sub-tasks in the list, enable a user to perform the sub-task by entering information into the respective panel associated with the sub-task as the panel is presented, detect information entered by the user in a panel associated with the sub-task, determine a change in a datum corresponding to a parameter of the sub-task based on the information entered in the panel associated with the sub-task, determine a new sub-task that is required to be performed by the user to complete the task, the new sub-task being determined based on the change in the datum corresponding to the parameter of the sub-task, and update the list to include the new sub-task.
